Ghost Tour of St. Petersburg Raises Spirits with Downtown Reincarnation

St. Petersburg, FL, 2008 – Amid the flurry of the downtown St. Petersburg renaissance, an alternative for the after dinner crowd has taken root in the unofficial town center. Since opening in 2004, the Ghost Tour of St. Petersburg has offered nightly tours of the city's historic streets, covering various haunted sites in an eight block radius.

This year, the Ghost Tour has added newly uncovered stories about St. Petersburg's past and welcomed new storytellers to their staff. They have also added two new tours. The "Toast with a Ghost" Haunted Pub Crawl is similar to the downtown tour, except extra time is given at several haunted establishments. The Ghost Tour at Jungle Prada, near the Gulf Coast beach resorts, boasts the Boca Ciega Bay as a backdrop for stories mysterious and mystical. Both are available for groups and private tours.

At each of the approximately ten stops on each of these tours, a costumed storyteller tells a ghost story associated with the location, giving onlookers a glimpse of history by candlelight.

One such stop, the old Detroit Hotel, harbors a mysterious portrait in the attic, one whose eyes follow unwitting intruders. And the Grand Dame of St. Petersburg, the Vinoy Resort, counts a revenge-seeking misty woman in white among its guests. Not all the stories on the tour involve ghosts who prefer to remain nameless, however. Others spotlight national icons—such as Babe Ruth and Jack Kerouac—and men and women from the early 1900s who played integral roles in the city's development.

No matter the spirit who stars in any particular story, the Ghost Tour provides an authentic experience of St. Petersburg. All of the stories are based on the book Ghost Stories of St. Petersburg, FL, by Tim Reeser, a collection of history and folklore-based accounts that delve deeper into the shadows of Florida's Sunshine City.
